VOLTERRA, Italy – Mar. 25, 2013 – With the release of the Breaking Dawn Part 2 movie and DVD, fans of Stephenie Meyer's beloved Twilight Saga have been left thirsting for more of her fantastic world of romance and mythology. Now fans can rejoice with the release of Twilight in Volterra: set in the real town of Volterra, a sparkling gem nestled in the Tuscan hills of Italy, this documentary explores the locations Meyer so carefully describes in the Twilight books. Twilight in Volterra (www.twilightinvolterra.com) is available worldwide.

Four-time Emmy Award-winning filmmaker Jason Brown takes you in stunning HD through this beautiful Italian town in Tuscany. Fans can visit the spot where Edward nearly took his own life to save Bella, and drive in real time with Alice and Bella on their frantic dash through the Italian countryside to rescue him. Viewers will gain new admiration for the accuracy with which Stephenie Meyer brought this town to life, even though she had never set foot in Volterra before penning New Moon. From the hints at magic and mystery on every corner to the fascinating traditions of the residents, Volterra is revealed as the perfect setting for vampire lore. It's the glamorous world of Twilight like you've never seen it before – even in the Twilight movies, which were not shot in the real Volterra but two hours away in Montepulciano!
